Visit the actual Kranji Battle Site defended by the Australian Forces where the Japanese landed in 1942 and the effectiveness of the British "seafire" tactics.

Find out why the British had to surrender at the Bukit Timah Ford Factory where the surrender documents were signed.

"As an Australian whose Grandfather is buried at Kranji, this incredible site and monument to fallen Allied soldiers was a must see on my trip to Singapore. Beautifully maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission, the gently sloping hill displays the graves of nearly 4,500 souls, and the memorial walls some 25,000 plus names of allied servicemen and women whose bodies were never recovered. These are staggering numbers, and it is an intense reminder of the needless waste of human life that wars can cause. This is a very emotional experience for anyone who has relatives buried or memorialised here, however, I would encourage anyone with a fleeting interest in history or those from allied countries to visit and pay respect to the men and women who fought to maintain the freedom we enjoy today."
